Grades 5-8

This is a website we created according to the six traits. Students click on one of the links in the area they need help with (check out freerice.com) either at home or as a differentiated activity

Grades 6-12

If the name skool sounds familiar, it is because some of their creations are in the notebook gallery. There is also a senior tab for older students.

Grades 8-12

This is a site that contains virtual panoramic views of various concentration camps. There is nothing like a 3d appearance to make it come to life.

I like this one for teaching "voice" and speaking to an audience. It has tons of poets, etc. reading their own writing. Use the smart board to capture pictures and record your class' thinking during the audio.

Grades 3-8th

This is a fun proofreading website with many different pages to proofread. Each different activity is proofreading something different. One is agreement of verbs, another adding commas, etc. You choose the grade level and then there are many choices. You must have Shockwave on your computer and play around with it a bit to get familiar with how the activity works.

the kids will need to type in the correct answer, so they need to have access to a keyboard if it is displayed on the Smartboard.

Madlibs, how fun is that!!!

<http://www.guysread.com/>

Geared towards "Middle guys", and "Older guys".

This is an interactive website focused on boys and reading. Some menu options include, "Find a book", "Guy's picks", and "Start your own guys read". A reader can find books or book ideas by typing in the name of the book, the author's name, or the type of books he likes. Under the "Guys' picks" section, participants can read or write book recommendations. This is a great resource for me, and one I can recommend to students who have difficulties finding books to read or they lack interest in reading in general.
